3	(Call to order of the Court.)
4	THE CLERK: Please come to attention. The Court is in
5	session. This is the United States Bankruptcy Court Northern
6	District of California, the Honorable William J. Lafferty
7	presiding.
8	THE COURT: Okay. Good afternoon, everybody. This is
9	Judge Lafferty, and I suggested we gather Zoom-ily (sic) today
10	for something that I hope will be helpful, which is a
11	discussion of any ruling on the committee's motion to be
12	substituted in as plaintiff in the insurance litigation pending
13	before Judge Corley in the district court.
14	So let's go ahead and take appearances.
15	THE CLERK: Your Honor, calling line item number 1 for
16	the Roman Catholic Bishop of Oakland, case number 23-40523.
17	And parties being moved over now.
18	THE COURT: Okay. Okay. Anybody else appearing that
19	we know of?
20	THE CLERK: It doesn't look like it, Your Honor.
21	THE COURT: Well, okay. Perhaps. That's it?
22	THE CLERK: Yes, Your Honor.
23	THE COURT: Okay. All right. Let's have appearances.
24	I think you're muted, Mr. Moses.
25	Still.

1
             THE CLERK: So Your Honor, on our end, it shows that Mr. Moses is unmuted, so perhaps he --
 2
 3
             THE COURT: Oh, well. I'm sorry then. We don't know 4 what the problem is.
 5
             THE CLERK: -- needs to change his speaker.
 6
             THE COURT: Would someone else like to make an appearance, and we'll see if it's us.
7
8
             MS. RIDLEY: Good afternoon, Your Honor. This is 9
    Eileen Ridley, Foley & Lardner, on behalf of the debtor RCBO.
10
             THE COURT:
                         Okay.
             MS. RIDLEY: Mr. Moses is my colleague. I believe I 11 have other colleagues online. Can you hear me?
12
13
             THE COURT: Can you hear you, yeah.
             MS. RIDLEY: Okay.
14
15
             MR. MOSES: Your Honor, this is Shane Moses.
16
             THE COURT:
                         There you are. Okay.
17
             MR. MOSES: Apologies.
             THE COURT:
                         That's all right. That's okay. Let's get 18 everybody else's appearances.
19
20
             MS. ALBERT: Good afternoon, Your Honor. Gabrielle
21
    Albert, Keller Benvenutti Kim, on behalf of the committee.
22
             THE COURT: Okay. Thank you.
23
             MR. PLEVIN: Good afternoon, Your Honor. Mark Plevin, 24
    Plevin & Turner, for Continental Casualty Company.
25
             THE COURT: Okay. Thank you.

             MS. LUU: Good afternoon, Your Honor. Betty Luu of Duane Morris on behalf of the London Market insurers.
 2
             THE COURT: Okay. Thank you.
             Any other appearances? I know we have other people on 4
 5
    the Zoom. Right.
                       That's it?
 6
             THE CLERK: Yes, Your Honor.
             THE COURT: Okay. Can I begin with a moment of 7
    levity? At least I hope it's levity. Sometimes, I don't know.
8
9
    I am one of those people who is a stickler for how one dresses for a hearing, but counsel in the Foley sweatshirt -- no, I'm 10
    going to -- I'm going to -- I'm going to chide myself here.

                                                             So
    this is in the parlance of our debtor, you have an indulgence.
14
15
             MS. RIDLEY: And I appreciate that, Your Honor. I --
             THE COURT: No.
16
             MS. RIDLEY: -- tried to have a jacket over a shirt
17
18
    so --
             THE COURT: No, it's okay. When smarty-pants judge 19
    tells you I want to talk to you about something and gives you 20
    no time to get ready, it's not your fault. Okay.
21
             Let me take a moment for a little bit of background
22
           I'm aware that there is a motion on before Judge Corley 23 in the insurance -- well, what I'll just loosely call the 24
25 insurance action that's pending in front of her tomorrow on the debtor's request that that matter be abated or held in abeyance. I deduce that it might be helpful to the parties and to Judge Corley, if I am prepared to resolve this motion before that hearing, that I do so. I don't believe that my ruling will be the only matter that would be of interest to folks tomorrow, to either the people making arguments or to judge Corley.

But to the extent I can level set, I guess is one way to put it, both my disposition of the motion and to the extent that's dependent on where I think we are in a volatile environment involving a disclosure statement and plan that the committee tells me is unconfirmable as a matter of law and that the debtor tells me is being amended and is, while perhaps imperfect, certainly not to be derailed. So I wanted to give you all some thoughts about that motion.

So a little bit of background. As you all know, the action that's in front of Judge Corley was commenced in front of me. And it sought various types of relief with respect to the insurance companies, including declaratory relief and including breaches of contract on theories that the insurers were obligated to defend and weren't doing so and are obligated to indemnify and arguably weren't doing so.

One series of motions to dismiss were brought before me. I granted them with leave to amend. At that point, the parties put their heads together and mutually determined that this is a matter for which the reference should be withdrawn. So the Judge Corley, who is a district judge who certainly has experience in determining these kinds of insurance coverage issues, would be able to do that, and I would not, which was perfectly fine with me. Judge Corley obviously has seen quite a few disputes of this type and certainly knows her way around the resolution thereof.

And I did not believe there was any reason to think that my losing control, for what it's worth, of that action was going to be so deleterious to our process here that I should suggest that not happen. I think that that, in many ways, has been on a separate track. And that's clearly true because in the meantime, over a period of months, there's been robust motion practice with respect to that action in front of Judge Corley, such that the debtor is on their Fifth Amendment complaint now and such that Judge Corley has very directly told the parties that she expects there to be — absent the abatement, she expects there to be substantial contemporary progress, even though they're arguably still at a pleading stage, all of which is her discretion and her good judgment. And I have nothing to say about that one way or the other.

But now I'm understanding that the committee -- I'm sorry, the debtor, in their mind, synched up with their view of what the plan would accomplish were it confirmed. The debtor has taken the position that it would be smarter, all in all, not to dismiss the action in front of Judge Corley or even necessarily to, for lack of a better word, dispose of it by some sort of trade or other disposition that would basically terminate that matter, but rather more or less to put it on hold while we go through the matters we need to go through to determine whether this plan and disclosure statement should go forward, and if so whether upon a confirmation hearing that plan could be confirmed.

So that's a basic background. And I will say this, not meaning to be flip, understandably at a juncture where they are not satisfied with the plan in several respects, including the amounts that the diocese is putting into the survivor trust. Including some aspects of the disposition of the -- through the litigation option, the various parties' rights against insurance companies and with respect to also some aspects of the way the debtor is at least implicitly valuing the claims. The committee has objected to the approval of the disclosure statement on the theory that it describes a plan that cannot be confirmed as a matter of law.

Certainly, as part of that analysis, informing it as well is the notion that from the committee standpoint, the plan is so deficient and so unattractive to the folks that represents the abuse survivors that the possibility of getting an affirmative vote through that class is about zero. And the committee points out that in those circumstances, it is a rare case, if any, that a bankruptcy court has confirmed a plan over the dissenting vote of the abuse survivors, all of which I take at absolute face value. I think those are good points to make.

Whether I find the plan is nonconfirmable as a matter of law is another issue. The voting is one thing. Objections are another. So I have tried to separate those things out in my head, at least to figure out from my bankruptcy-judge-traffic-cop persona how does this go forward and what's the order of progression here. Consistent with their view of the plan, the committee has asked me to take a number of actions that they believe better reflect the appropriate way forward.

One of those is that I grant a motion for relief from stay, and I'll speak somewhat, hopefully, illuminatingly, but not conclusively about that at the end of this discussion.

Another is that I permit the committee to take on the prosecution of a number of actions that would have as their goal the assertion of claims that the committee believes the debtor is not currently pursuing. And that's a classic derivative standing motion.

The third, for today's purposes, is a motion that the committee be allowed to take on basically the role of the plaintiff in what I'm calling the insurance litigation, the litigation in front of Judge Corley. Now, as originally set forth, the committee made the points they wanted to make in that motion, but they did not set it out necessarily under the four-part standard re derivative standing. And that's not a critique. That's an observation.

In the response by the debtor, the debtor did set forth the four-part standing for -- four-part standard for derivative standing to assert and prosecute a claim. And although the parties disagree fundamentally about whether certain aspects of that standard are relevant to the analysis we have in light of all the facts and circumstances of the request in light of the insurance litigation, I think nobody has told me that that standard is completely inapplicable here or it wouldn't be helpful in working our way through how we should think about this. So I think there's some agreement there.

So the four-part standard that was identified, and it's from Yellowstone Mountain Club LLC, which is at a Westlaw cite that's at page 13 of the debtors' response to the committee's motion. One, a demand has been made upon the statutorily authorized party to take action. Two, the demand is declined. Three, a colorable claim that would benefit the estate if successful exists based on a cost-benefit analysis performed by the Court. And four, the inaction is an abuse of discretion or unjustified in light of the debtor-in-possession's duties in a Chapter 11 case.

There was initial disagreement about two of those factors. There was disagreement -- well, one factor and one overall concern. The debtor took the position that the derivative standing standard, although it would be the way to think about this problem, was in many ways inapplicable and the relief was not available to the committee because the action had been commenced. So this is not the what might be the more classic version of this problem, where there is an action that is identified by a party who is not presently situated to bring it. That party writes a letter to the party who has the ability to bring the action, outlines the action, outlines what they believe the benefits of it to be, maybe takes the position about the overall cost benefit analysis, requests that the action be taken, and awaits a response. This has not played out exactly that way.

So the argument presented first by the debtor was, well, without that initial question of an action has not been brought, the committee really is not pursuing this in an appropriate way. This fails at that initial stage. And then the case law was cited back and forth for that proposition, the committee taking the position that cases that seem to say that really were distinguishable factually and in other contextual matters.

I'm going to agree with the committee on that part. I do not believe that this is a matter that cannot be considered because there was an action pending. I think we're going to get past that objection. To the extent that there was also an objection that, well, the committee did not technically make a request that the action be commenced because one, it has been commenced, and two, they simply didn't couch their request of the debtor in those terms. And therefore, another necessary factor of the test has not been made.

I'm going to rule with the committee on that one too, that, in fact, in light of the whole point of this analysis in this context is what's actually happening in this case. What have parties done, what would happen if we go different directions, and what really is to be balanced here between the committee's request that the insurance actions simply go forward in a different manner under their direction or that that not happen.

So I think with all those factors, and given the fact that what the committee is complaining about here, and I think understandably, is that while the asset is not necessarily being completely forgone, it is being put on a back burner such that the committee believes it is not being utilized as it should be, given the fact that they're doing that because the debtor has proposed a plan that does suggest that the proper way to go forward is to utilize the insurance assets through an option that claimants have to pursue that sort of relief in a different court and along state law lines.

Given that reality, I think the committee -- I wouldn't say that it was futile that they would ask, but it was not going to advance the ball in any sort of analytical way for the committee to ask that the debtor just not pursue their plan and therefore do this. So as to that, I'm going to agree with the committee as well, that those two factors, to the extent they're factors, are not gating and aren't disqualifying for this request.

So then we get into what's really at stake here. And I think if we look at the cases and we look at the kinds of analysis courts do, what they're trying to figure out is is there a colorable claim. The quick answer to that question is there is because it's been asserted, and it's survived four motions to dismiss. So technically, the first question, is there a colorable claim? Yes, there is.

Then the question becomes what should be done about it. And I agree with the debtor that -- well, I agree with the committee that while the fact that an action is pending isn't disqualifying, the fact that an action is pending does change the way we think about these things. The action is out there. It is pending. The debtor has prosecuted it.

The debtor's position right now is we've spent a million-and-a-half on this litigation. We're almost done with the pleading stage. And frankly, we have a plan that in our mind, while it undeniably shifts the burden of these determinations away from the debtor and onto the claimants, nonetheless allows for some appropriate understanding and disposition of the question whether there is insurance coverage, number one. If so, who's on the hook. And beyond that, whether there are rights -- which is both with respect to the debtor, in name, at least, with respect to the liability, but then possibly with respect to the insurance companies as the parties who may be paying a significant part of this, if not all of it in some circumstances.

So what's in front of me is not the traditional simple case of the debtor has decided simply not and never to pursue an action on the theory that it's a bad idea. The classic instance of that might be you don't want to sue your most important trade creditor for a preference because they don't have to do business with you, and it's better to keep that relationship than to terminate it, effectively. So what the debtor is telling me is that we're not terminating this action. We're not trading it for something else so that it is no longer available for use. We're asking that it be put on hold for a while we play out, in our view, what we think is at least at the moment a confirmable plan.

The committee's position is that to the extent that is a request that I honor the business judgment of the debtor, that's inappropriate. We had a long discussion about that and the basis for that argument by the committee during arguments last week. And I pressed Mr. Burns somewhat on the assertion that I had found in the committee's papers that any deference to what we might think of as business judgment rule in favor of the debtor was inappropriate, where the debtor's judgment was arguably tainted and arguably tainted by a conflict. So we explored to some depth whether this was a conflict or not. And not meaning to be flip, but Mr. Burns, in the course of that argument, I think, retreated a bit from the position that it either were a conflict or needed to be one to change the analysis for a business judgment rule. And that conversation went where it went.

I will say, for what it's worth, I will reiterate my skepticism that if the committee is alleging a conflict here, I just don't see this that way. This would be a conflict if there were two entities to whom the debtor owed a duty and the duties were equal and they were adverse and one could not satisfy one without disappointing the other. And I just don't see this that way.

The debtor is a fiduciary, that's absolutely true, to the unsecureds. But the debtor's decision, in my view, to reformulate the way one would go after and monetize and utilize an asset of the estate, the insurance, the right to insurance, and the proceeds, the debtor's decision to do that in one way rather than another is not the sort of stark I'm favoring one party over another, where I have duties to both. Scenario that I think describes a conflict.

So in my view, it's not a conflict, nor do I see anything in the process that's been revealed to me so far, by which the debtor made that decision, that -- while the committee may not enjoy that decision, may think it's the wrong one, and may someday even convince me that's the case, for sort of threshold gate purposes, I don't see anything in the process that the debtor has taken on here or that has led to the decision that is itself wrongful or corrupt or nefarious or anything that would give me reason to pause about how they got from the initial analysis to the result, which is here's a plan that we think is going to work.

So to the extent that we begin with the conflict analysis, I will tell you, I don't find that compelling. I don't think it's a conflict. I think this comes down to a question of, among various options, can I make a decision right now that the option to pause this and not to have it go forward as robustly as the committee might like is necessarily harmful to the estate or is necessarily even the wrong answer. And the bottom line is I cannot do that at this point.

The beauty of Chapter 11, as you all know, is that sometimes we have several balls in the air, and that actually helps. This is one of those moments. The debtor has proposed a plan. We will continue the discussion tomorrow about whether the disclosure statement on file now describes a plan that is patently unconfirmable. I have not made up my mind about that in terms of all the arguments that have been made to me and the papers that I have so far.

What I can say, and if this is helpful to the parties and to Judge Corley, as I sit here today, I do not have -- I have not reached the conclusion, as I sit here today, that this plan is unconfirmable as a matter of law. Now, what will happen with the vote is a whole other question, and I am very mindful of that and how we talk about how we proceed from here to a confirmation hearing is something we'll talk about tomorrow and probably after tomorrow. But to the extent that this would all turn on me determining right now before Judge Corley will have her hearing on the abatement motion that Judge Corely, full speed ahead. Whatever you want to do. This plan is a nonstarter. I have not made that conclusion yet.

It doesn't mean it's perfect. It doesn't mean there won't be lots of robust discussion tomorrow about why I should come to the conclusion that the plan is unconfirmable, and I will listen to all those arguments. And there's also likely to be lots of discussion about what we need to do to make the plan better than it is. All that's fine. But in my view, what I have in front of me now is simply the debtor's decision that the better course of action, for now -- and not for all time. We're not trading the asset. We're not terminating the asset. For now, the better course of action is to pursue a plan that they believe is, at least theoretically, confirmable, as to which there is no gating objection, because of which I have to stop this process, and that is an intelligent assessment of the risks and rewards.

So on all that basis, I think it's appropriate for me to deny the motion. I'll make a couple of other comments. This is not for all time. As I've said in other context, time is a long thing. And if we end up in a situation where I am convinced, either by legal arguments or by the vote of constituents, that the plan the debtor proposes cannot be confirmed, we'll be in a different place. And at that point, it will be -- there will be nothing wrong with reconsidering whether, as part of that scenario, the better course is to is to allow the committee to be more of a protagonist here than they are right now.

I will make another couple of comments. In coming to this conclusion, I'm very mindful of the abuse of discretion standard that's referenced. And I think it's referenced both with respect to how the parties who are jostling over these kinds of actions should look at their choices and how a court should review those choices once they are made, perhaps even how a reviewing court would review my choice if someone were to tell them that I made a mistake.

But abuse of discretion, as you all know, is an extremely broad standard. And what it basically -- for appellate review standards, what it means is the party making the decision has proceeded in a way -- they have chosen a rule that is consistent with the decision to be made. And they have exercised that discretion in a way that is not implausible or unlikely or totally without support from the factual record before us.

I think I can say at the moment, without making a final decision on this, for abuse of discretion purposes, I think the debtor looking at this from a cost benefit analysis of is it worth pursuing at full speed the insurance litigation in front of a Judge Corley versus this plan, I think, without deciding whether that's ultimately the right decision, I think I can say that it strikes me that from an abuse of discretion standpoint, that is not so wrongful a decision that I would stop it in its tracks right now.

I will also remark that the debtor and all the parties are certainly mindful of what is actually at stake before Judge Corley now, and there are certainly arguments. While the matter is colorable, there are arguments that it's a little less, oh, I don't know, disputatious than it might have been some time ago, as the insurance companies agree that they're going to -- they're going to defend actions. That's maybe not as salient an argument as it had been before. And as well as Mr. Plevin and others make remarks to me that for the indemnity purposes, that's not really ripe until one gets a judgment. I think Judge Corley is very well aware of that doctrine, and she can make those decisions certainly.

And to the extent that there's a virtue in determining over time who is responsible at different times for the insurance obligations and who's primary, who's excess, whether things have been exhausted or not, those are all matters that are in front of Judge Corley but for which there are unlikely to be answers tomorrow or the next day. Those would play out over some time.

So that's all to suggest that the exigency of immediately proceeding full speed with the insurance litigation may not be of the highest order either, in the context of where we are today. So I will make all those observations.

I will also observe that the committee's request to be allowed to exercise the privilege of the debtor, given the decision I'm making, I don't have to go into that in detail. I will tell you. I paused long over that. I thought that was potentially of concern. And although the committee was quite sincere in telling me that this motion to -- that I was the person to whom this motion should be brought re standing, having said that, this was not an attempt to end run something Judge Corley would do or otherwise not do or otherwise complicate that matter unnecessarily.

I take the committee's statement at face value that this was a good faith attempt to get the jurist whom they believe has the power to decide who should be prosecuted and actually to make that decision. Having said that, it is not lost on me that deciding that in the committee's favor right now, especially in light of the abatement motion, would likely have been at least distracting, if not a stronger word than distracting, to Judge Corley's determination of the abatement motion.

So for all those reasons, and with enormous respect for the wonderful arguments that everybody made here -- I'm sorry Mr. Burns isn't here to hear my flattery of him. I think he did a wonderful job conceiving of the problem from his perspective. But for all those reasons, I'm going to deny the committee's motion to be entitled to assert standing with respect to the insurance motion. Again, this is not for all time. This is in light of the facts and circumstances present now. And if those change, well, we'll take the question up again when those factors change.

Unless someone has a question about this, certainly, Mr. Moses, to the extent you folks are the prevailing party, do not try to encapsulate all of my rulings here or all my impressions. You can simply say that under FRBP 7052, for the reasons stated on the record, the Court has denied the motion.

Unless somebody has a particular request to this, I have two other matters I want to touch on very briefly for tomorrow.

Anybody? We're good?

Okay. And I assume that people will inform Judge

Corley of this outcome. You're certainly free to do that.
Okay.

With respect to the motion for relief from stay, I am leaning toward granting that. But I am concerned about the following. And to the extent anyone can give some thought to this and give me some guidance or thoughts or suggestions between now and tomorrow, I'd be grateful.

I'm very mindful of the fact that these matters have been -- well, the matters that are in front of the coordination judge in Alameda County are the matters from which maybe as many as six actions would be selected to represent bellwether litigation. That's fine. I'm mindful of two things that Mr. Simons told me with great candor, and I appreciate his candor the other day, that of those six, three of those did not involve the Oakland diocese. And one, I think, had come to a different resolution.

So whereas before, I might have been somewhat heartened by there were six matters kind of ready to go, that doesn't seem to be the case now. So I am a little bit worried about the efficacy of granting the motion for relief from stay if one would go back to square one, even to determine what other four matters would be brought, if six seems to be a reasonably representative number.

The second matter that concerns me is I'm mindful of the fact that the judge who had been presiding over this matter now has a different judicial role, and there was a new judge appointed to this. And my understanding, also from Mr. Simons, and I think this was confirmed by others, is I don't remember who that judge is, but whoever that person is has not yet had a hearing of any sort in the consolidated matter. So I'm a little bit concerned that -- again, a granting a motion for relief from stay, I'm just not sure what is going to happen in any kind of prompt schedule. So I'm not suggesting there's an answer to those questions today, but I want to take up this question as well tomorrow and just see what else people can tell me about those questions and about timing and about the efficacy of granting a motion and letting the matters go forward in light of those factors.

Secondly, with respect to the committee's other motion to take on standing to prosecute various actions, I understand that the committee the other day had said they would stand on the papers. I know that the debtor's counsel, one, has some points that they want to make in opposition to that motion.

And two, their schedule is such that they're asking that that matter be argued first. That's perfectly fine with me. I'm assuming that if there is argument by the debtor, the committee will want to respond at the lectern, and that's understandable. Okay. But the thing I'm grappling with here is what is, to me, kind of an obvious gating question, and I just want to know either why this isn't an obvious gating question or what you guys think we should do about it.

If the single biggest piece of this, and not to denigrate all the things the debtor would like to do, that's fine. If the single biggest and most obvious piece of this is an alleged fraudulent transfer or other clawback action with respect to the money that was transferred from the debtor to OPF prior to the commencement of the case, there seems to be an unarticulated disagreement between the parties as to the consequence of the debtor's position that while those monies might have been property of the estate for broadest 541 purposes, they were not usable by the debtor for various purposes because of the terms of the grant. So they are restricted in some way.

So the debtor's position is, well, they may be estate funds, but clawing them back is really kind of meaningless. So one wouldn't undertake the effort because they're property estate, and they aren't. They're not usable to pay creditors. So therefore, a fraudulent transfer action really is neither here nor there.

The committee seems to disagree with that position, and maybe for several reasons. And it may be they may include that in order to take advantage of that kind of argument, the debtor would really have to have something more akin to a trust agreement or something that would more satisfy the requirements of California law that an asset not be disposable by the party to whom it was given, by the donee.

So my question for tomorrow will be whether we should try to figure out a mechanism to answer that question before we get into whether the committee should be taking on matters that the that the debtor doesn't believe should be taken on if there's a gating legal issue as to whether that would benefit the estate in any event. So if parties could let appropriate folks know that that's on my mind and if people could be prepared to talk about that, I'd be grateful. This is nothing — this is not within light years of a decision on the committee's motion, which I think is very intriguing, but it does pose for me a question that if I could answer that at the outset, I might be a lot smarter.

So in that context and in that vein, I would pose it back to you folks and ask that we address that fairly early in the presentation. Okay. I mean, there's lots of ways we might do that. There might just be a contested matter now that we could create one that we could just determine in the course of the bankruptcy without having to file a lawsuit. It may be that you can't do that, and so the committee's position would be, no, we have to follow the lawsuit and we'll have that fight. That's fine. But it seems to me that's fairly gating. So I wanted to get that out there.

All right. Okay. Anything else from anybody?

Thank you for your patience. Thank you for your
